Victoria serves as the co-chair of Kegler Brown's Privacy and Data Security practice area and focuses her practice on domestic and global business and intellectual property litigation. She has represented U.S. and foreign companies in complex commercial litigation, dispute resolution, and management of e-discovery.

From defending clients in multiple jury trials to advising clients doing business in her native Colombia, Victoria's litigation practice reflects the unique and diverse experiences of her life. Before relocating to Ohio with her family, Victoria spent years as a public defender in Arizona first assigned to capital habeas appeals and later trying major felony cases. Prior to practicing law, Victoria was an industrial engineer in the technology and automotive sectors and a competitive figure skater. Victoria joined Kegler Brown in 2016.

Litigation

Victoria is well-versed in managing a case from its beginning phases to a judgment or settlement; taking responsibility for research, motion writing, trial preparation, mediation and arbitration. Recently, she has litigated copyright infringement cases in the construction sector, data security and privacy claims in the banking sector, and breach of contract disputes in the medical sector.

Privacy + Data Security

A member of the International Association of Privacy Professionals, Victoria regularly advises clients on privacy and data security issues. Not only does she assist clients with state, federal, and international compliance, but also with preparing strategies for responding to data breaches and other security incidents. Her experience includes facilitating the resolution of cases involving ransomware, assisting multi-global companies with recovery of losses after a breach, proactively reviewing existing policies for domestic and foreign companies to minimize risk of potential litigation, and supervising the transfer of data as an asset in the enforcement of judgments.

Global Practice + Latin America

Victoria's fluency in Spanish and her education and work experience in Latin America allow her to help U.S. and foreign companies navigate through transnational disputes and issues of foreign law. Victoria has helped American companies with interests in Latin countries as well as foreign entities litigating matters in state and federal courts throughout the United States.
