Bill joined Kegler Brown in 2016, primarily practicing in the areas of oil and gas, and real estate, and bringing with him years of experience with complex title due diligence in multimillion-dollar asset acquisition efforts. In addition to providing efficient and effective legal counsel to his oil and gas clients, Bill also works with the firm's environmental practice and is a regular contributor to the firm's energy blog, Ohio Energy + Environment.

Oil + Gas

Bill provides guidance to oil and gas producers and developers with a variety of needs. Previously, he spent years travelling the state performing tasks ranging from lease verification to drill site abstracting, and recommending curative measures at each step of the process. Bill is also particularly adept with navigating the complicated title related to "held by production" leases. Subsequently, he has developed significant experience in areas involving the transfer and retention of mineral rights and analysis of title to oil and gas interests, as well as the ability to explain complex topics in a clear and easy-to-understand manner. After the Supreme Court ruled in Corban v. Chesapeake Exploration, finding that the Ohio Dormant Mineral Act did not operate automatically, Bill has spent significant time working with fractured oil and gas title rights, helping to clean up old rights and reservations.

Real Estate

With title experience in Ohio, Kentucky, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Wyoming, Bill is able to provide valuable counsel to companies in the energy industry regarding the conveyance and reservation of mineral interests and the curing of title defects. In addition, he is an experienced negotiator of real property agreements involving the development, transportation and utilization of natural resources, including leases, amendments, ratifications, and rights-of-way. His practice also includes leasing related to the various needs of wireless telecommunications companies, including reviewing titles for potential tower construction sites and their subsequent lease amendments.

Mergers + Acquisitions

Bill also supports business clients in their mergers, acquisitions, divestitures and other transactions by providing buyers and sellers effective streamlining and clarification through risk management analysis and legal due diligence.
